

How the cyberattack against UNFI affected 4 independent grocers

The distributor said it is still relying on manual processes to fulfill orders as it works to bring its systems back online after an intrusion earlier this month.

Published June 18, 2025

Sam Silverstein
Reporter

A cooler in a Whole Foods Market store in Gaithersburg, Maryland, on June 15, 2025. The company is one of the biggest customers of United Natural Foods, Inc., which is recovering from a major cyberattack. Sam Silverstein/Cybersecurity Dive

First published on  GROCERY DIVE

United Natural Foods, Inc. is continuing to rely on manual procedures to receive and fulfill orders from customers as it works to recover from a cyberattack that compelled the grocery wholesaler to entirely shut down its online platform on June 6, a UNFI spokesperson said Monday.

Cybersecurity
Dive

Russian cyberattack opens floodgates of dam in Norway

'The aim of this type of operation is to influence and cause fear and chaos among the population. Our Russian neighbour has become more dangerous", she said

by Redazione

eunewsit

— 14 August 2025 in Defence & Security

DIGA DIGHE BACINO BACINI IDROELETTRICO IDROELETTRICI ENERGIA VERDE ALTERNATIVA ECOSOSTENIBILE ELABORAZIONE DIGITALE ACQUA
ECOSOSTENIBILITA' ENERGIA RINNOVABILE ENERGIE RINNOVABILI